Waste Infrastructure 'needs' and Community Engagement

Adam Read will provide an insight into how effective waste management has a strategic role to play in tackling climate change. He will look closely at community engagement and its role in successful infrastructure delivery and how to get buy-in from the public and stakeholders.

Adam will share his experiences of what he has found to be successful (and not) and will provide a top 10 list of things to consider if faced with a project of this kind

Dr Adam Read – Practice Lead
Waste Management & Resource Efficiency, AEA

Adam has over 15 years of operational waste management experience and was recently awarded an honorary professorship for his pioneering work on waste communication and public engagement. He has worked with the UK Government on a range of local waste strategy and service delivery projects, including leading the consultancy team that developed the DEFRA funded New Technologies Training Programme.

AEA is a world leading energy and climate change consultancy and has reduced the UK's annual CO2 emissions by over 3.1 million tonnes.
